NK’AFRI TECHNOLOGY GROUP

A Letter from the Founder · Building Africa’s Technological Future

Founder’s Letter

Why this group exists

Draft · Prepared for the founder’s review

Africa does not lack problems worth solving, and it does not lack the talent to solve them. What it has lacked, for too long, is ownership of the technology built to do the solving.

Too much of the technology this continent runs on is researched somewhere else, owned somewhere else, and rented back to the people it serves. Nk’AfrI Technology Group exists to change that pattern: a parent organization that researches, develops, owns, operates and scales technology here — built for Africa first, and shared with the rest of the world only once it has proved itself at home.

The conviction behind the group is Pan-African: unity and self-determination, applied through technology. That is why the portfolio is not one product or one industry. A country’s needs do not stop at a single sector — they run through its farms and clinics, its classrooms and markets, its money, its power, its roads. The vision is to work across all of them: the sectors already exist; our work is to go into each one, understand where it strains and where it is underserved, and build the technology that answers — filed under exactly one sector, and judged by one standard.

Africa first is a discipline, not a slogan. It means languages, mobile money, connectivity, devices and purchasing power are treated as design inputs from the first sketch, never as afterthoughts. It means one market at a time, entered on evidence. And it means problems before products, always: every project must answer the group’s ten questions and pass its two gates before it earns heavy building or scale.

PAMOZIQ, our first portfolio business, is where that discipline is being proven — honestly, at pilot stage today. This group is still in formation: not yet incorporated, not raising capital, not promising anything it has not yet done. We are building it in the open, and we will keep saying plainly what has been done — and what has not.

If you build, research, teach, invest or run the institutions Africa depends on — and you believe the continent's technology should be African-owned — the conversation is open. Start it on the Contact page.

Blaise Irankunda

Founder, Nk'AfrI Technology Group · October 2026

Status of this text: a draft, prepared from the founder's stated philosophy for his review. It becomes the group's published letter only when he approves its final wording.

Nk'AfrI Technology Group · Parent of PAMOZIQ · In formation